Flood Reflections:

Thoughts While Poking Through Ruins

By RAY KOHN

STROUDSBURG, Pa. (AP)—"We've gotten soft," said Mrs. Harold Albert as she helped her husband clear muck and rubble left by the devastating flood which shattered much of the twin resort towns of Stroudsburg and East Stroudsburg.

Mrs. Albert continued: "We've been getting easy. The television, the car, the club, the automatic this and that. Now we'll be neighborly again, like in old times."

But she like the other 13,000 residents of the two communities still stares with disbelief at the havoc wrought by the raging waters of Brodheads Creek.

Brodheads is for fishing and the summer not this.

When our house started to fill with water, Mrs. Albert went on, we slept in the garage. We found utensils on a little higher ground and prayed.

The prayers must have been answered. Across home, a quarter mile away, was whipped from its stations and was whirled past the garage not more than 50 feet away.

That home crashed on an other lawn still another quarter mile down the road.

As for the road, you can find a way. New shiftless again.

Cleanup of asphalt here and there. You peer intently at the rubble and spot a table here, a dishpan, potatoes, corn still on the stalk, a child's wheelbarrow.

A white object in a morass of debris turns out to be an electric light bulb. You shake it, and no, it's not broken. You try it later in a light socket and it works.

Stop to talk with anyone and it's hard to get away. He or she can talk and talk about that happened. Talking seems to act as an anesthetic to help ease the pain of reality.

No one will forget the mother of four children who resided in the Flats section of what once was a street in East Burg. She was trapped with the four kids all night on the roof of her home. Rescuers picked them up were singing "Row, Row, Row Your Boat Gently Down the Stream."

In every town there are so many shiftless characters. Not want to work.

What did they do in the emergency?

Well, Bill — and Joe — came of carrying atomic warheads. is a serious menace to the security one woman said. "He never of Japan and peace in the Far
